GENERAL REMARKS.

The education of the children is something in which every parent and citizen should be interested. Education is as necessary for the development of the mind and the prosperity of a nation, as food is to the body. I think our schools hold to-day as dear a place in the hearts of the people as ever before. The education of the children is still of paramount importance, and always will be. Differences of opinion may exist as to the best plan to be pursued for the thorough and general culture of those connected with our schools, but that a large majority of our citizens desire anything short of the best methods and best work is not my province to question. In the schools of this town the larger portion of the scholars are under 12 years. It is a great mistake to suppose it does not require as much skill and experience to teach small scholars as large ones, and the common school studies as the higher branches. True, it does not require as much book learning to teach spelling as algebra, but the teachers who have a large number of small scholars under their care must feel deeply the responsibility when they undertake to guide so many minds in the right path; for the character and ability of the man depends largely on the kind of instruction received in youth.

A difficult thing in education is to instruct the mind and not weaken it. To pour information into the mind and not crack it—though it is questioned if it be possible to put information into any mind,—the true educator will create mental wants and lead the pupil himself to satisfy them. The essential thing in education is that the pupil learn to think clearly. This is the first step in the process. Thus and thus only will the pupil be educated for the necessities of life, for its duties, for citizenship, for happiness, and his best welfare. A fault I notice in some of the schools is that the teachers carry the scholars instead of insisting that they must go themselves. There can be no real scholarship, no genuine advance in any study, only as the pupil is made to go alone and do the work himself; and there is no more reason why the teacher should be continually performing the pupil's questions in arithmetic, finding his answers for him in geography, than there would be for her to do the pupil's play at recess.

Scholars cannot be too careful to learn well the first or fundamental principles of the sciences they study. For instance, the scholar who thoroughly understands addition, and adds and subtracts rapidly and accurately and makes every figure legible and in its right place, has a far more useful knowledge of numbers than some who have blundered over the whole of a common school arithmetic. Few outside of stores and banks can add numbers rapidly and accurately. He who has learned to read, whether from newspapers or books, has the art, and that is all of it, except as the valuable instruction and good language in his reading lessons are useful.

In our schools there is too much tardiness and absence. Tardiness of pupils breaks in on the quiet of the schools, absence retards the progress of the pupils. When a scholar who is barely able to maintain his place in class is taken from school for any trivial affair, or is allowed to absent himself for his own pleasure, there is irreparable loss to that scholar, for when a scholar falls behind his class, he usually loses all ambition to learn, and the school room becomes a prison to him, from which he is only too anxious to escape. The responsibility of these evils rests largely on the parents. While parents are usually anxious to have their children punctual and regular in attendance, orderly and obedient in the school room, there are too many who allow their children to act their own pleasure respecting school regulations.

A child who is trained to be punctual, obedient, truthful, and industrious at home, will usually manifest the same habits and disposition in the school room; and in proportion as the home influence and its early associations are good or bad, will be the tendency to correct principles strong or weak.

The schools during the past year have exhibited a good degree of improvement. The teachers have generally had experience and acknowledged success previous to their employment the past year; or if without experience have been known to us as diligent scholars. Mere book knowledge is but a small part of the material needed to make a successful teacher. In addition there are needed firmness, patience, good judgment, skill, and a power to govern. A trained mind is always better than an informed one, hence the advantage of normal schools in giving the teacher a special preparation for her work. Here she is taught what to anticipate and how to meet it.

Parents, do not criticise the schools or teachers on hearsay, but visit the schools, that you may know for yourselves what work is being done, and if the money for which you are taxed is wisely expended. Such visits stimulate teachers and scholars to greater efforts.

In closing, the temptation to allude to the subject of the pay of the School Board can not be resisted. It is certainly not proportionate to the amount of work needed to be done.

With the moderate compensation allowed, the traveling expenses incurred in visiting schools ought to be paid by the town. If 50 or 75 cents were paid for a team to visit a school for a half day, for which about the same amount is received in compensation (unless very few visits are made), the member of the board is inclined to wonder if the emoluments of his office do not consist in a large measure of "empty honors." A fairly generous allowance here, as well as in other branches of labor, tends to produce more enthusiasm and therefore better work.
